Thus begins several nights and days of dancing on different stages, popping Molly, impromptu stripping, drinking beer, sharing laughs and meeting a couple of new faces.

Rather, it is what you know the organic food does not contain, or has not happened to it on its journey to your table, that makes buying organic a no-brainer to the educated consumer.

I realize this may present significant technical challenges and may not be feasible, but just a fun idea.